Benefits and Services for Environmental Laboratory Members

APHL serves as a focal point for environmental laboratory communication, training, policy and interactions with the federal government. Drive laboratory advancement and join APHL today!

Here is some of what we can do for you:

- Provide a place to gather with colleagues from other environmental laboratories to share ideas, collaborate and connect to federal agencies such as USEPA and CDC's National Center for Environmental Health.
- Present opportunities to shape policies, laws, regulations and activities at the national level.
- Offer educational and training events, often at member-discounted prices. Topics include laboratory safety, quality assurance, ethics, workforce development, lab equipment and more.
- Identify venues for you to share your expertise, such as at educational workshops and conferences.
- Respond to your needs, through committees, workgroups and online communities, such as the Environmental Laboratory Sciences Committee, the Environmental Health Committee, the National Biomonitoring Network and the Government Environmental Laboratory Online Community.
- Keep you updated with regular communication during large-scale events such as the Gulf Coast Oil Spill and Fukushima.
- Provide a wealth of information through the Member Resource Center and the Survey Resource Center.
- Apprise members of the latest in laboratory developments such as methodology issues and potential funding opportunities like small grants and applied research through newsletters, magazines, blogs, tweets and more.
- Enhance recruitment efforts by posting job openings on our online Job Center. (Members receive a 40% discount on 30-day and 60-day job postings.)
- Offer workforce support through the APHL/CDC Environmental Health Fellowship.
