About APHL

The Association of Public Health Laboratories (APHL) is a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization uniquely representing state and local public health, environmental, agricultural and other public sector laboratories. APHL serves as a link between member laboratories, federal government agencies and private sector partners, and is the primary advocate for the laboratories that monitor and detect public health threats. APHL’s members are a critical public health resource in identifying and monitoring outbreaks of infectious disease, chemical contaminants in people and the environment, and foodborne illness. In addition, these laboratories screen newborns for genetic and metabolic disorders; respond to natural disasters, industrial accidents and suspected biological, chemical and radiologic terrorism; conduct testing that supports enforcement of water, food, dairy and environmental safety laws; research disease trends and develop new laboratory technologies; and contribute to the formulation of state and national health policies.

Who Our Members Are

APHL members include state, territorial and local public health laboratories; state environmental testing laboratories; state agricultural and food safety laboratories; and individual scientists, public health officials, federal agency representatives, academicians and students.

Sustaining Membership - Visibility, Information, Insight

APHL’s Sustaining Member Program has enabled public health professionals and corporations to partner in new ways to help shape national and global health outcomes by promoting the value and contribution of public health laboratories.
